Is your current position research-intensive or research-related?

The NIH defines research-related positions as those that generally require a doctoral degree, and may include activities such as teaching, administering research or higher education programs, science policy, and technology transfer. Other positions that may be classified as research-related are those focusing on the review of research, providing scientific direction or guidance to research, and supporting research through analytic or other technical activities. Such work may take place in academic, government, non-profit, or commercial settings, including biotechnology or pharmaceutical companies.
